Pressetext Album Talking Cure ::

«Talking Cure» is the title of the new Camp longplayer, which was released on the 9th of November and which was preceded by the reliably fresh and appetising single «The Truth about Art». The accompanying video clip's animation was done by François Chalet. In the song a voice, supposedly British, meets danceable beats and guitars reminiscent of Blondie. Add to this a bit of a punk attitude and 80ies synthies, melted together with rare perfection.

With the release of their new album Camp have proved that there is more to them than writing straight dancefloor hits. The three rock musicians, every one of them knowledgeable about the more modern history of pop music, have found a multi-layered sonic language, the speed, style, beauty, and mood swings of which never fail to surprise and move the listener. By now, Camp have started to put one's soul into a state of turmoil. The title of the new album, «Talking Cure», complements the suffering. Ironically, the title refers to the three smalltown-neurotics' need for a shrink's couch, and the musical idols The Cure and Talking Heads. Since their last album, Camp have been moving backwards from the 80ies to the late 70ies. And, accordingly, you get «more filth» and «less kitsch». The voice remains desperate. This is because, according to singer Dominic Suter, «we are moving backwards, towards our birth years, and once we get there, the band will probably call it a day.»
